About the fund

The Fisher Funds Australian Growth Fund aims to produce long-term growth by investing in a concentrated selection of high quality and growing Australian companies. Our Investment Team hand-pick businesses with durable competitive advantages, that have the capacity to grow earnings for many years, and that are run by high performing management teams. These companies tend to be global leaders in their field and derive a high proportion of their earnings from international markets.

Why choose this fund?

If you are looking for higher potential growth in your investment over the long term and are comfortable with the volatility that comes with a higher risk fund, and also like the diversification offered by investing in the Australian market, this fund could be a good choice for you.

Fund highlights for July 2025

The Australian Growth Fund rose +3.4% in July, ahead of the benchmark index which rose +2.7%.

The Australian share market continued rising in July as tariff and trade war concerns abated further (albeit significant uncertainty on global trade remains). The share market rally was broad based with 10 out of 11 sectors ending the month in positive territory.

Private equity firm PEP entered an agreement to acquire Johns Lyng (+23%) for $4 per share. This was one of our best performing companies in the month. The Board has unanimously recommended that shareholders vote in favour of the deal. The transaction has been structured to enable management, including CEO Scott Didier, to retain their shares post deal. This will ensure that management remains strongly incentivised to drive further value for PEP should they be successful in closing the deal.

Domino's (-5.2%) was one of our worst performing companies. The share price fell following the announcement that CEO Mark van Dyck (who only started in his role in late 2024) is stepping down. The Board seems happy with his strategy of rationalising the store base in poor performing jurisdictions such as Japan and France. He is also seeking to lift operating efficiency and cut costs across the business. However, the scale and pace of these improvements seem to be less than what the Board would like. Consequently, they have made the call to replace Mark and speed up the operational improvement of the company.

Up close & personal

Robbie Urquhart describes one of our companies: SEEK

What does it do?

SEEK operates the largest online employment marketplace in Australia, New Zealand, Hong Kong, Indonesia, Malaysia, Philippines, Singapore and Thailand. It also has minority investments in similar online employment marketplace businesses in China, South Korea and a number of other countries. Through its SEEK Growth Fund, it has investments in high growth technology businesses across HR SaaS, Education and Contingent Labour.

Why do we own it?

In Australia, New Zealand and across its South East Asian marketplaces SEEK has a strong competitive position by virtue of being "front of mind" for job seekers. It will continue to benefit from the migration of employment advertising from traditional media to online. Domestically, successful development of new products like its talent search platform will provide high value new revenue streams. Its international investments give SEEK exposure to faster-growing, less mature employment markets.
